Balance

As a mother of two young children, I wanted to give them more attention. This meant work-life balance became even more important to me.

While working full-time in Technology Consulting, I liked where my career path was headed and wanted to stay on that road. I simply needed options and Accenture offered me a part-time choice.

Over the past few years, I've worked 75% to help balance my work and personal commitments while maintaining the same career progression opportunities as my colleagues. I'm grateful that part-time has a positive impact on all areas of my life. It required adjustments from those I work with and since it's an uncommon situation, educating my team was key. Everyone was willing to adapt as I set work parameters to achieve the best for all.

Leadership assigned me to a delivery role. They trust that I can continue to perform well as a part-timer. I am responsive, dedicated and I rely on my teams to make good decisions. My service is seamless for the client, resulting in incredible relationships and experiences.

It is remarkable to me that working part-time means that I can be fully committed, present and add value. Because of this flexibility, I am able to thrive at work and at home.
