MJ: STAYING FOCUSED ON IT SECURITY

VIDEO TRANSCRIPT

Photography interests me because whenever I see an object, people or a scenery in front of me, I tend to see it through a photographer's eyes. The lighting, the angles, the composition, these are the details that make things interesting.

For me, photography is more than just about capturing the moment, it's about capturing the little things that are easy to miss, but which make a photo come to life.

Focusing on details is a large part of my role within Managed Security Services at Accenture. I handle one of the Security Operations Tower, where I'm responsible for detecting vulnerabilities in our clients' IT systems and advising them on how to mitigate these risks, which could actually arise anytime and from anywhere across the world.

Accenture provides us with a lot of training and tools, which actually help my knowledge and skills to be up to date. There are also opportunities, like connecting with other security professionals, both within and outside of Accenture, which gives me great exposure to different perspectives and developments in the IT security world.

I like to stay sharp on how I can help my clients feel safe and stay secure from the constant cyber security attacks.
