

ROWING IN SYNC TOWARD THE SAME GOAL: INNOVATION

AMBERT YEY, SENIOR ANALYST, ACCENTURE FEDERAL SERVICES, WASHINGTON, D.C.

Video Transcript

Playing the violin reconnects me with my parents, who have always pushed me to excel.

My name is Ambert Yeh, and I'm a management consulting senior analyst at Accenture.

So my parents are first generation immigrants from Taiwan.

They came to America just so they could start a better life for themselves as well as for their family.

I work in a global company and having my diverse background really helps me in my day-to-day work.

My parents, at a young age, they pushed me to start learning Mandarin, going to Chinese school. So, when I joined Accenture, I really wanted to get back to my Chinese roots, and I was able to do that through the Asian Pacific American Employee Research Group.

The ERG is kind of just a mix of different people from different cultures but really focusing on Chinese and Asian culture.

I found that not just a diverse cultural background, but different educational backgrounds really add to the work that we deliver to our clients.

I think that diversity and innovation are almost synonymous.

You can't really have true innovation without a diverse viewpoint, and, as the world becomes more connected with social media, the need for diversity becomes much more apparent.

I love the technical aspects of working with data, but, at the same time, I really like people interaction.

I love meeting new people, learning about their backgrounds, and just doing good work with them.