

JOEZEL: HARNESSING A PASSION FOR ARTS AND THE NEW IT

VIDEO TRANSCRIPT

I have always been interested in the arts – painting, drawing, cartoon sketching. This is really what I am passionate about.

I used to join art competitions when I was in school. I get inspired at what I see around me. And when I was in college, I was even a part-time art teacher in my high school.

I'm comfortable expressing myself through my drawings. I guess that's why I like SAP HANA. It's more visually appealing to me because you can easily create data models graphically and we can integrate them to other SAP reporting tools that use geographical maps and graphs to report analytics.

I'm the Development Lead of the first SAP HANA project of Accenture in the Philippines. I actually had no HANA experience when I applied for the role, so this is a really big opportunity for me.

I told the project manager that I learn fast. I told him I would learn HANA in three months before the project starts and I would prove to him that I can do it. Our client is one of the largest shipping companies in the world. Our job is to transform its 15-year-old system using the newest technologies from SAP.

My team has improved the client's reporting process with SAP HANA. Before, it took days to generate the reports needed for planning shipments, but with HANA data comes directly from the system in near real-time and computations are done automatically.

Now, it takes seconds to generate a report. And that means faster planning, more efficient service and satisfied clients.

My team does the technical design and develops the analytics for the client. And our designs are being used globally.

You know, none of the members of my team came in with HANA experience. Everyone is learning on-the-go. And so far, we are doing really well.

One thing I always tell my team is that it doesn't matter whether or not you have the skill, you can always learn it. You just need the right mindset.

Honestly, it isn't always easy but it's worth it.

I'm Joezel and I make a greater impact by driving change to improve myself, my team and my client.
