

BE: WORK YOU CAN TAKE PRIDE IN

VIDEO TRANSCRIPT

Hi, I'm Sherri, I'm a Business Analyst at Accenture, and I'm from Melbourne, Victoria.

So, I was born in Melbourne but spent the first 15 years of my life living in Singapore and then I came back for high school.

One of the reasons why I chose Accenture was actually because of the culture. Accenture has one of the best programs for, not just an inclusivity and diversity for women, but also for LGBT. So, Accenture doesn't look at you as a gender, Accenture looks at you as a person and what do you have to offer.

Accenture has a program called Hour of Code, what it does essentially brings STEM into the primary schools to young females can be inspired and to know what STEM is, because a lot of times females won't enter STEM because they don't know about it. And if you don't know about it, how are you going to get into it?

Here at Accenture, there is a aim to get 50/50 diversity by 2025. And, to me, that was a big thing because having someone represent me, having someone represent that my gender in the workplace was really important.

After COVID, everyone went online and that's where all the excitement is. That's where all buzz is. You kind of just want to be part of it, you want to be in it. And that's where I am.

So a good day of work is when, you know, we've helped a client figure out what the issue is. Achieving solutions. That, that's probably what makes me really happy.

One of the things I love about Accenture is that Accenture provides everyone opportunity to volunteer. Every employee is given 7.5 hours to spend it in whichever charity they choose to. This charity that I chose through Accenture is Southern Cross kids camp. provides a week of happiness to children from abuse and neglected backgrounds.

There is often a misconception that tech is just about coding, but technology is more than coding, technology is essentially getting different ideas coming together and connecting the world together.

I want to give back to society. I want to be the change. I want to be part of the change. I want to lead the change.

Come work at the heart of change.
