Mountaineering.
Resources.
Transformation.

Hey Philip, tell us...

Question:

High in the mountains or at the seaside?

Philip:

High in the mountains.

Question:

What did you want to be when growing up?

Philip:

A fighter pilot.

Question:

How did you end up at Accenture?

Philip:

I chose Accenture because it was outside of my direct field of study. For me it represented the adventure, working with many clients at many different locations and bridging the gap between business and IT.

Question:

What is your expertise?

Philip:

Transformation consulting for chemicals and natural resources clients.

Question:

What does a typical day look like?

Philip:

Every day is different and it's fantastic. In the morning, I could be talking to the client about digital production and how that will create operational efficiency. In the afternoon, I could be having lunch with a CEO, talking about the strategy of his company.

Question:

What differentiates Accenture from other companies?

Philip:

On a purely business level, we have an unparalleled expertise amongst our offerings and clients. On a people level, we have a truly connected network of very passionate people.

Question:

What is your hobby?

Philip:

Mountaineering.

Question:

What do you love about it?

Philip:

Mountaineering is about reaching a common goal. It's about 2 or 3 people in a rope team against the mountain. You're not playing against anyone else, but you're basically pushing your limits, trying to overcome an obstacle together and that's what's beautiful about it.

Question:

Most challenging mountain you climbed?

Philip:

Mont Blanc, taking the long way up and the short way down.
