ELISE: So, we're talking about robots in the wild but we're really talking about is robots everywhere not only in business but on the streets surrounding us. Companies have had robots in heavy industry for a while but what we're seeing now is they're taking, you know, taking places in all aspects of our lives and I think that's going to be a trend. What's interesting, we surveyed CEOs and other C-suite executives and said: "is your workforce ready for this?" 55 percent said they were and they were comfortable, they feel like they could adapt, but 45 percent said that employees would be very challenged, they didn't really know what to do with that. And so, we say it's a trend but how is it really going to get done and what's going to happen for the workforce?

MARC: I love that, I mean, I think like you remember like 6 years ago or 7 years ago in 2013, we said every business is a digital business, I believe that we're shifted a little bit now, which is like every business is a robotic business almost. Because a lot of things are going to be automated, a lot of things you're going to have to work with bots and cobots, and so forth like this, so people need to be trained. They need to understand exactly the interaction and it's related to some trend that we discussed in the past. This intercommunication between machines and humans could be at the center of all the business that we're going to develop in the next 10 or 20 years.
