My generation: Focusing on climate change, poverty, and inequalities

Video Transcript:

Jessica Long, managing director

Greetings from the World Economic Forum Annual Meeting in Davos, Switzerland. The world is changing so fast, and that pace of change requires leaders who can quickly react in a responsible and sustainable way. We need a future generation of leaders who aren't just about the next quarter's profits, aren't just about business growth, but are also about improving the state of the world in which we live and work.

The Young Global Leaders Community is a group of over 1,000 leaders from across the globe and across the private, public and civil society sectors dedicated to improving the state of the world around them.

We are launching a report with the WEF Young Global Leaders Community. The report is called Corporate Disrupters: How business is turning the world's greatest challenges into opportunities. This report is focused on the sustainable development goals aimed at ending extreme poverty across the globe, reducing inequalities and fixing climate change.

We work with companies to ask, "How do we turn that around? How can I use that as a way to grow my business?"

I hope you will find some time to take a look at our report on the Corporate Disrupters and join our conversation on how business can do good and do well.
