5 tips for working mothers: Start by being honest with clients and supervisors

Video Transcript:

Sofia Vago, managing director

It's Fundamental that any working mother be able to fully dedicate herself to her family, while developing professionally at the same time.

I have two sons, a 6-year old and a 9-year-old. One day, at school, they asked my older son to describe what his parents do. I told him that I was kind of like a business doctor, I go visit them, see what's wrong, and try to make them run better.

That's what we do at Accenture, see how we can add value to our clients and help them to become successful businesses. Accenture has always been by my side throughout the different stages of my life. I started working her 17 years ago as an analyst, I received training, grew as a professional, and today I am part of this company's leadership.

I believe that the key to that growth was balance, constant challenges, without having to miss my children's first day of school or a single school event.

My name is Sofia and I am Executive Director of the Natural Resources Industry at Accenture.
