

COOLEST JOB EVER MEET ALESSANDRA

VIDEO TRANSCRIPT

My name is Alessandra Zuccon and I'm a strategy analyst in Accenture's Toronto office. I've been working here at Accenture for almost two years now since I graduated University where I completed a dual degree in medical sciences and business.

First and foremost I think one of the most important things is the people that you meet and work with. With the people I was meeting at Accenture, it just felt right. Everyone was very approachable relatable super down-to-earth and those are the type of people that I saw myself wanting to spend time with and wanting to learn from.

I'm living downtown and my commute is as easy as a 20 minute walk or a 10 minute bus ride. I am heading into the final few weeks of a project where we are working with a company to do a refresh of their three-year strategy and it's been a really interesting and cool experience because not only are we looking at financial performance both historical and projected for the next three years but also you know exploring many different factors of what they want their future vision to look like.

After work to clear my mind and kind of reset and de-stress and do some exercise and right now I'm kind of outside getting ready to go for a run. I'm training for a half marathon which is happening in a few months actually.

The biggest highlight of my time so far here at Accenture has been the opportunity to work on an Accenture Development Partnerships project in my first year as an analyst.

In my case it was a non-profit here locally in Toronto that I had actually grown up not only admiring but I'd been volunteering with and I've been going to a lot of events for so I felt personally really engaged and excited.
