

THE FELIX PROJECT

CHANGE FROM EVERY ANGLE: ON A MISSION

VIDEO TRANSCRIPT

Duncan MacNichol

Volunteer Driver, The Felix Project

I went to a school about two years ago. Now, this was a little lad looking over the fence at me. He was maybe four or five. And he said to me, "You're from Felix, aren't you?" I said, "Yes." And the little lad said, "Oh, Good. We'll have something to eat tonight then."

Steve Thomas

Interim CEO, The Felix Project

Everyday across London, with our four depots and hundreds of volunteers, we rescue, we sort, we prepare and deliver about 250,000 meals worth of food to those communities that need it most.

Duncan MacNichol

What The Felix Project actually does: it rescues food that would otherwise go to waste and redistribute out to charities or needy causes.

Steve Thomas

The food that we rescue and that we redistribute is overwhelmingly top quality food.

Georgie Czernobay

Central & Green Scheme Manager, The Felix Project

When I started, the charity had only been running for two years. And in the time that I've been there, the sort of expansion that we've seen has been really rapid and the impact that we have has really grown as well.

Steve Thomas

Our scale is important to us. We're really only a third of the way to our ambition to deliver about 100 million meals worth of food to the Londoners that need it.

Georgie Czernobay

The ultimate goal for The Felix Project is not to exist anymore. I think that's a strange thing to say about an organization, but we are an immediate solution to a much wider problem.