VIDEO TRANSCRIPT

Ronald

Hey, how are you?

My name is Ronald and I work as a Senior sourcing execution senior analyst here in beautiful Prague. I moved to Prague after finishing my Masters Business Administration at the University of Amsterdam, and I was looking for a first job abroad. I wanted to go to another country to start my career.

I found out about Accenture actually already in July during my Masters. I think Accenture is an example of consultancy firms, which was referred to a lot also doing my masters. So that's how I found out about it. I've been in only for three months now.

Well, the procedure of getting my job at Accenture was that I was being approached via LinkedIn and I think because I had some experience in procurement already, I did two internships before in procurement, and they were looking for someone who spoke Dutch and has experience in the field.

As a senior sourcing analyst, you are responsible for different companies and sourcing is the process of finding the right candidates, the knowledge or skills that is required from my position. One of the most important things is time management, that you're well able to organize your day. I think there's a lot of responsibilities for yourself to be able to organize, but in order for this, you really need to think proactive and to make sure you don't have deadlines at the same time.

So the special technologies we work with are for example SSE workflow, Jaggaer and these are platforms for sourcing technology. What I like about Accenture is that variety of people that you meet throughout the company. I think they're very nice people. And also here in Prague and Exchange operations, a lot of young people, people like me that wanted to work abroad for a while, start their careers.

The ideal profile for a candidate would be someone that is always curious, good at time management and always want to learn. And I think if you have these three components, you're definitely a good candidate. I think other people should come to Prague because it's a very vibrant and a very, very beautiful city. It's only one hour away by plane. Let's meet in Prague.
