Agency Missions are too Unique to Share Services

Myth: Shared Services is the Same as Outsourcing

Shared Services are not Worth the Investment

Myth: Shared Services Leads to a Loss of Control

Federal agencies can save $1.625 Billion by implementing shared services.

The Federal IT Shared Services Strategy urges executives to complete thorough cost-benefit analyses before moving to a shared service. Here are some things your shared service provider could stop supporting: Rent Utilities Employee

The Federal IT Shared Services Strategy urges executives to complete thorough cost-benefit analyses before moving to a shared service. Here are some things your shared service provider could stop supporting:

• Improve technical capabilities
• Cut costs and achieve economies of scale
• Enhance mission performance
• Remove redundant mission services

In 2012, rates covering 74% of federal leadership positions below senior executive service (SES) were implemented.

Shared service providers can give agencies the flexibility needed to procure essential services. These comparisons should include existing systems and services before transitioning.

Federal agencies are being asked to follow best practices with top government decision-makers, understanding the deep value inherent in industry's experience and engaging and supporting federal agencies.

Аt $184 Million, the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) has already committed to savings through shared services.

The Federal IT Shared Services Strategy urges executives to complete thorough cost-benefit analyses before moving to a shared service. Here are some things your shared service provider could stop supporting:

• Improve technical capabilities
• Cut costs and achieve economies of scale
• Enhance mission performance
• Remove redundant mission services

In 2012, rates covering 74% of federal leadership positions below senior executive service (SES) were implemented.

Shared service providers can give agencies the flexibility needed to procure essential services. These comparisons should include existing systems and services before transitioning.

Federal agencies are being asked to follow best practices with top government decision-makers, understanding the deep value inherent in industry's experience and engaging and supporting federal agencies.

At $184 Million, the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) has already committed to savings through shared services.