Natali:

When I went for job interviews I would dress like a typical girl to get through. A few months after joining, I would switch back to the normal Natali.

When I moved to Recife, my wife and I looked for training courses. She found a technology course on the internet called Accenture In The Future. It's a partnership with Rede Cidadã for people with low incomes.

I like working at Accenture because you're accepted the way you are. You just have to be professional. There isn't any discrimination and that's really important. I feel free as a bird. I can get on with my work without fear of being judged.
