I get very excited about the idea of growth . . . of forward movement. And aspects of my work in technology keep me constantly adapting and stretching myself.

It's really inspiring for me working with other like-minded people. Developing professionally and personally is what they want too. We share ideas and interact in ways that push one another to adapt our skills and stay relevant.

Also, I have the opportunity to work with not just one, but a variety of major technology companies—large, small, existing and new players that are on the leading edge of innovation. It means that I'm involved at the front of the next big thing, expanding my knowledge and skills to help clients use technology to do things that they couldn't do before.

These are just a few ways that I grow and thrive, every day.
