MEET CARL

Fridays, I generally work from home, but what I like to do during my lunch hour is actually record my cooking show on YouTube, Filipino Food Fridays. I think when it comes to a lot of Filipino cuisine a lot of it is taking pieces from your garden or pieces from the farm and just bringing it together with whatever you have on hand, in order to create something that everybody enjoys and it brings people together. And I think in Consulting it's a very similar thing, you basically take the pieces and the small things that the client may have problems with you kind of bring them together and then try to find solutions.

So, for us what we try to do is implement systems for state government or for city governments in which we want to improve their work flows for people in the communities to gain their benefits. So, one of the major things I do is train people, how to implement these systems as well as how to use these systems in their daily lives.

I speak to vice presidents, CEOs, CIOs, all the "c" acronyms that you can think of because what I want to do is gather information from them about what they're feeling about their current system, what they want to see in a new system, how we're going to bring them there.

My name is Carl Rana, I'm a Consulting Analyst in the health and public service division at Accenture.
